Please provide summary information on the process by which this report has been prepared, including information on the types of stakeholders who have been actively involved in its preparation and on material which was used as a basis for the report

The National Biodiversity Committee first met to review the questions in this document and provide as many answers as possible. This committee further identified a number of interest groups and persons who would be able to provide answers to some of the questions as well as background information needed to complete this report. Please provide information on any particular circumstances in your country that are relevant to understanding the answers to the questions in this report

Saint Lucia is a small developing state highly dependent on limited natural as well as financial resources. As such, although the country has recognised the need to conserve and protect its biodiversity, there are few mechanisms currently in place to ensure this.

Notably, the island has completed and adopted its National Biodiversity Strategy and Action Plan in which specific procedures are outlined to address these issues. But, finances and other resources are yet to be identified to effectively implement this plan.

Further, a full-time national secretariat to coordinate the activities pertaining to this convention is not yet in place, and thus, many of the work programmes, decisions, annexes etc. have not yet been completely reviewed, making tasks required to be carried out under this convention difficult for the moment.

The COP has established programmes of work that respond to a number of Articles. Please identify the relative priority accorded to each theme and the adequacy of resources. This will allow subsequent information on implementation of each Article to be put into context. There are other questions on implementation of the programmes of work at the end of these guidelines.

Further comments on work programmes and priorities

Although work programmes have not been reviewed in full, many issues addressed in these programmes are current areas of focus. However, there is no comprehensive mechanism to ensure that these programmes are addressed in full, that is, current projects and programmes are mainly based on ad hoc and sectoral efforts.

Further comments on relative priority and on availability of resources

- The St George's Declaration of Principles for Environmental Sustainability in the OECS and the adjunct OECS Environmental Management Strategy have been developed out of a recognition of the need for OECS member States to take a common/cooperative approach to environmental management. Pursuant to this, Principle 13 of the Declaration, and implicitly Principle 17, provide a basis for putting in place mechanisms for cooperation.
- Human and local financial resources limited.
- No formalised institutional arrangements are currently in place. However, a National Environmental Management Strategy is in the process of being developed. This strategy, together with a currently ongoing institutional review of environmental management agencies in St Lucia, provides the basis for putting in place formalised institutional arrangements.
- Lack of national representation at international forums due to lack of finances and lack of legal/economic advisors at such forums.

In effect, these conventions are all being implemented by one set of interest groups allowing some extent of cooperation in implementing these conventions. However, in the absence of a formal institutional arrangement for cooperation among conventions some duplication of efforts does take place.

Further comments on implementation of this Article

74. In terms of regulating the use of resources, there are certain biological resources that have been given a significant amount of attention, e.g. marine resources and the St Lucian Parrot; however, there still exists some resources for which regulatory management mechanisms are inadequate e.g. Queen Conch, lobsters, shared pelagic resources, and ecosystems such as beaches and mangroves.

75. A System of Protected Areas for St Lucia was developed in 1992 by the St Lucia National Trust but was never adopted in full by the Government. However, management plans are currently being developed for a few of the protected areas recommended in this document and there are several other legally declared protected areas currently in place. Many of these protected areas lack active management plans.

- The Japanese Government provides financial support in cetacean management.
- The French Government has provided support for coastal and fisheries resources management.
- The Jersey Wildlife Preservation Trust supports parrot conservation.
- The European Union supports a host a different management efforts e.g. sustainable fisheries, coastal zone management, freshwater resources management, sustainable agriculture and other in situ conservation measures.

A number of other funding agencies sponsor projects directly or indirectly relating to the conservation and protection of biodiversity.

Available information regarding alien species is focused on only a few species, namely:

- Pink mealybug
- Giant African snail
- Ambyloma tick
- Verroa mite

132. Most of the indicatives in this regard have not been through direct bilateral cooperation between countries. St Lucia has typically benefited through regional programmes that facilitated exchange of genetic resources e.g. of banana and food crop germplasm through the Windward Island Banana Development and export Company, and the Caribbean Agricultural Research and Development Institute.

The most recent programmes to exchange plant germplasm for ex situ conservation programmes has been through the Taiwanese and Chinese Governments.

Animal genetic resources have been exchanged for ex situ conservation through an ongoing program with the Jersey Wildlife Preservation Trust in the United Kingdom, with respect to the conservation of the St Lucian Parrot and the St Lucian Whiptail Lizard, both of which are critically endangered.

133. One example of the reintroduction of threatened species is the translocation of a small population of St Lucia Whiptail lizards from one offshore island which represented the world range for the species, to another offshore island where a viable population has now developed.

Another example is the establishment of Coccothrinax barbadensis (used in broom making) from ex situ collections back to its wild range.

- The St Lucia National Trust developed a system of parks and protected areas in 1992, but this was not adopted in full by the government.

- A number of marine reserves have been declared under the Fisheries Act but many of these lack management systems in place.

- The establishment of two marine management areas (zoned coastal areas) along the west coast are aimed at protection and conservation of coastal and nearshore resources. The process used to establish these areas and maintain them involved wide spread consultation and continues to allow ongoing participation by users and other interest groups in management of the area. The management strategy used to create and maintain these areas has been deemed successful and the areas serve as well known case studies for stakeholder participation and management of natural resources - the Soufriere Marine Management Area Case Study was submitted to the executive secretary.

- Some linkages with other conventions with regard to the protection and conservation of biodiversity do exist e.g. the identification of areas for protection under the Convention for Dessertification - a report has been submitted to the secretariat of this convention but is relevant to CBD.

- Some action has been taken by the St Lucia Heritage Tourism to utilise while protecting certain fragile areas and areas of high biological diversity. Numerous pieces of legislation and policies supports sustainable tourism e.g. the National Conservation Act of 1999.

- Public awareness programmes, for example those employed by the St Lucia Heritage Tourism, the Department of Fisheries and Forestry Department, are producing positive results in that they are enabling the adoption of conservative and protective measure in tourism related ventures.

The wording of these questions is based on the Articles of the Convention and the decisions of the Conference of the Parties. Please provide information on any difficulties that you have encountered in interpreting the wording of these questions

In general, no major difficulties were encountered in responding to these questions. However, many of the decisions and work programmes have not yet been reviewed in full since there is currently no national secretariat specifically focusing on CBD and thus officers on the steering committee are limited in time to devote to the implementation of this convention.

Notably, there was some difficulty in determining the amount of detail required by this report, but it was felt that any further detail required could be obtained from the country study and the NBSAP.

If your country has completed its national biodiversity strategy and action plan (NBSAP), please give the following information:
